

Do you already have a will, but want to easily add SOS Children's Villages to it?

From: <https://www.educaloi.qc.ca/en/capsules/changing-your-will>

Changes to a will are made in a document called a codicil. A codicil is appropriate for minor changes to an existing will. Minor changes include naming a new liquidator, modifying the liquidator's powers or naming another person to be responsible for any children under 18 after you die.

Changes to a will must meet the same conditions as a will. In other words, the changes must be handwritten, made in the presence of witnesses or by a notary. But you can make the changes in a different way from your original will. For example, the codicil can be handwritten, but the will done by a notary. However, if your change is holographic or made in the presence of witnesses, it must be validated ("homologated") by the court or a notary after you die, which involves costs and delays.
